R&D 100

2008 Award Winner

Laser-Induced Fluorescence Composite Heat Damage Detector

A portable, lightweight nondestructive heat damage detector that provides rapid and accurate assessments of early heat damage in fiber-reinforced polymer matrix composites in both military and commercial aircraft.

Developed by

Oak Ridge National Laboratory
Galt Technologies

Oak Ridge National Laboratory

Sponsored by
U. S. Department of Defense, Office of Naval Research

www.ornl.gov